A REAL POO-DUNNIT IN BURNABY

B.C. unsure of sexual consent

POLL

61% of people surveyed lack knowledge of full definition

Thandi Fletcher
Metro | Vancouver

A new survey suggests the majority of British Columbians don't know what sexual consent means.

While almost all Canadians (96 per cent) agree that sexual activity between partners should be consensual, 61 per cent of B.C. residents don't have a full understanding of the definition of sexual consent, according to a survey commissioned by the Canadian Women's Foundation.

According to the foundation, both verbal and behavioural consent is required for consensual sexual activity under Canadian law. Consent must also be ongoing and can be withdrawn at any time.

"It's such a fundamental piece of information for people to have," Diane Hill, spokeswoman for the foundation, told Metro.

"The key is, if you're not sure, you need to check. You need to just ask."

B.C. still fares better than the rest of Canada. The national average of Canadians who don't understand what sexual consent means is 67 per cent, the survey found.

The survey also revealed that one in 10 B.C. residents believe consent is not required for sexual activity between spouses and long-term partners, a finding Hill described as "disturbing."

Transatlantic pen friends began writing letters in 1949

Thandi Fletcher
Metro | Vancouver

When a nine-year-old Theresa Kowall received her first letter from a British pen pal in 1949, she never expected it to blossom into a lifelong friendship.

This year, the 75-year-old from Ladysmith, B.C., is celebrating 65 years of letter correspondence with Maureen Johnson, 74, who lives in the London suburb of Ilford.

"She's just like a sister to me, a distant one," Kowall told Metro. "It's just a strong connection, just this bond that we seem to have. It's very special."

It all started in 1949 at Tillicum School in Victoria, B.C., when Kowall's teacher, who had taught at a school in London a year earlier, organized a pen friend exchange between the two classes. Given a list of student names to pick, she chose Johnson because she had the same name as her sister.

Kowall said she eagerly awaited each new letter, which would sometimes take up to three weeks to arrive.

> She's just like a sister to me, a distant one.
> Theresa Kowall

"The first letters were like, 'I have a dog named Peanut.' And she would say, 'I have a cat named Roley,'" she recalled with a chuckle.

As the pair grew up, the correspondence continued, chronicling first boyfriends, then marriage and later births. Coincidentally, both women ended up on similar career paths as office workers, and both also enjoy gardening.

"We always supported one another and gave each other encouragement, even through illnesses, children and everything," she said. "Everything that's gone on in our lives."

In 1980, the two met for the first time when Kowall travelled to England. Although there was some trepidation from others about whether they would get along as well as they did in letters, Kowall said they "hit it off right away." Since then, she has been to England another four times, and Johnson has visited B.C. twice.

Earlier this year, the pair even received a letter from the Queen to commemorate their 65 years of correspondence and friendship.

Today, they communicate via email every day and don't plan on stopping their correspondence anytime soon.

Only once, in 1954, did they briefly lose touch when Kowall moved houses. She had to ask a schoolmate who was also still writing to her pen friend to ask Johnson to resend her address.

"And I never ever forgot it again," she said.

MAPLE RIDGE

School bus cuts rolling in

Matt Kieltyka
Metro | Vancouver

The wheels on the bus go round and round, but not for much longer in Maple Ridge.

School District 42 (Maple Ridge—Pitt Meadows) board chairman Mike Murray says school bus service for 370 students is on the chopping block with the district facing budget shortfalls of $1.68 million for 2015/16 and $1.44 million for 2016/17, brought on by the provincial government's order to cut millions in administration costs.

Cutting bus service beginning in 2016 is expected to save the district $720,000.

In an email to Metro, Murray said the decision came down to buses or increasing class sizes, which are already higher than the provincial average.

An aggressive energy management program will save the district another $400,000 and it also plans to implement a "bring your own device" policy for students by 2018.

The cuts, outlined in the district's preliminary budget, are just a few of the drastic measures school boards across the province are taking to comply with provincial legislation requiring them to collectively find $29 million in savings this year, and $54 million the next.

In Vancouver, where the school district's shortfall is $8.52 million, extensive cuts are planned for adult education and band programs.

BURNABY

Landlord wants stool samples under threat of eviction

Emily Jackson
Metro | Vancouver

A Burnaby landlord has demanded dog owners hand over samples of Fido's droppings if they don't want to face eviction — a threat that is debatably outside the law — in an effort to catch a pooch that pooped in an apartment building stairwell.

"A tenant let his dog poop on the stairs, twice, and did not have the decency to clean after his dog," according to a letter sent Sunday by the management at the Waldorf Manor at 7466 14 Ave.

The letter came with a plastic baggie and a request for a specimen to be tested to match the culprit with the offending excretion. There is indeed a business that does this — called PooPrints, it uses DNA testing to manage dog poop in condos and apartments.

Mustache the dog is taken for a walk by his owner Sara Hyslop outside a apartment building in Burnaby, B.C., Tuesday. JONATHAN HAYWARD/THE CANADIAN PRESS

"As you realize, refusal is not an option, rather admission of guilt, and reason for immediate eviction, as the law is on our side," management stated.

But that's not entirely true, according to Tom Durning of B.C.'s Tenant Resource and Advisory Centre.

> Refusal is not an option, rather admission of guilt.
> Excerpt from letter

Section 47 of the Residential Tenancy Act outlines specific reasons for eviction such as not paying rent, Durning said, and refusing a dog poop sample isn't one of them.

A landlord could argue that the tenant has "significantly interfered with or unreasonably disturbed another occupant or the landlord," but that dispute would very likely end up in arbitration, Durning said. Still, it could be hard to prove whose dog did the deed.

"If I'm the guilty party, I'd just go to the local park and pick one up. It's almost like a theatre of the absurd," he said.

The law is also not clear whether a request for animal feces infringes on a tenant's privacy.

The Office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner for B.C. has never received a complaint about landlords requesting animal waste — yet — but it does outline privacy guidelines for landlords and tenants, spokeswoman Cara McGregor said. There is a limit to how much personal information a landlord is allowed to collect, but it's not clear if dog poop falls under personal information.

Meantime, the practice of collecting dog doo to catch non-scoopers is apparently used at hundreds of apartment complexes across the United States, according to the Associated Press.

Girl escapes after being forced inside a car: Police

A 13-year-old girl was able to escape after a man allegedly forced her into a car and exposed himself to her, according to Vancouver police.

The incident happened at 8 a.m. on Tuesday in the area of Mackenzie Street and W. 45th Avenue in Vancouver.

Police say the girl was walking when a suspect drove up to her, asked for directions and then allegedly demanded she get in the car. The man allegedly grabbed the girl and forced her in and drove for a short amount of time before exposing himself. She was able to open the door and run away.

About a half hour later, police say another girl was walking down Dunbar Street near W. 37th Avenue when a man drove up to her and allegedly exposed himself. The girl was able to run away, and the suspect drove off.

A 20-year-old Vancouver man was arrested Tuesday afternoon. METRO

Amount of fuel spilled still unknown

Four weeks after the English Bay oil spill, Transport Canada still doesn't know how much toxic bunker fuel escaped from the bulk carrier MV Marathassa into Vancouver's waters.

The amount spilled is still under investigation due to complex calculations and information sharing between multiple parties, Transport Canada spokeswoman Jillian Glover said Tuesday.

Originally the spill was estimated at 2,700 litres, but Vancouver's city manager told council the real number could be almost double that. It's a bit murky trying to decipher who is responsible for determining the final amount spilled; both Transport Canada and the Canadian Coast Guard say the other party is making the final determination.

But even when the amount of fuel discharged is determined, Transport Canada won't necessarily share the information with the public, Glover said.

"It's part of the investigation. If this case proceeds to court, the investigation becomes part of the court proceedings," Glover said.

Evidence obtained through the investigation — including the amount of fuel spilled — would be public information at a trial if the polluter were prosecuted for contravening the Canada Shipping Act.

Yet it's not clear whether Transport Canada plans to take the ship's owners to court. The owners are co-operating with the investigation, Glover said, but she wouldn't speculate on the likelihood of a future court date.

Canada has a polluter pay system. If the ship refused to pay, its owners would be taken to court.

The cost of the cleanup has yet to be determined, coast guard spokesman Dan Bate said Tuesday. EMILY JACKSON/METRO

VANCOUVER PUBLIC LIBRARY

City invests $600K in new 'Inspiration Lab' downtown

Emily Jackson
Metro | Vancouver

Aspiring musicians on a budget can now record their future No. 1 songs for free at Vancouver's first public recording studio. All they need is a library card.

Four sound studios and one recording studio with a control room opened at the Vancouver Public Library's central downtown branch on Tuesday as part of the city's new $600,000 "Inspiration Lab."

It's part of the city's commitment to easing the digital divide and helping more people access technology.

"Sixteen per cent of our residents don't even have Internet at home, and many, many more of us don't have a recording studio at home," Coun. Andrea Reimer said on a tour of the 7,500-square-foot lab. "In a city like ours with such a huge creative sector and a huge digital economy, I think this will be very well accessed."

The lab, paid for equally by the city, the library and fundraising, also features video production and editing, analog-to-digital conversion of cassette tapes, VHS and pictures and self-publishing software.

Staff will be available to help people with the digital tools: for instance, if a grandmother needs help digitizing old photos to send to a relative in another city.

These services can be pricey in the private sphere, with recording studio rates starting at about $35 per hour, according to an online search of 10 companies. Library users will be able to book the studios in advance in one-hour slots for up to three hours a day.

The lab will help give more people a chance to create, said Terry McBride, co-founder of Vancouver's Nettwerk Music Group.

"The messages from these rooms will go all over the world," said McBride, who the library named the recording studio after.

"Go use it, imagine it, create from it, allow that to spread."

Experts track impacts of mine disaster

MOUNT POLLEY

Universities, feds release research paper

Matt Kieltyka
Metro | Vancouver

The long-term harm of last year's Mount Polley tailings pond breach remains unknown, according to scientists tracking the disaster's impact.

Experts from the University of Northern British Columbia, with collaborators from UBC and the Department of Fisheries and Ocean, released the first research paper looking at the disaster's immediate impact on Quesnel Lake and its surrounding marine ecosystems on Wednesday.

In a two-month period following the tailings pond breach (from Aug. 4 to Oct. 4), researchers recorded a lake level rise of 7.7 centimetres, a temperature rise of 1 to 2.5 C at the bottom of the lake and copper concentrations in sediment samples that — in some areas — were three time higher than quality guidelines for freshwater ecosystems.

UNBC researcher Sam Albers said measuring the impact of the breach is vital for a baseline understanding of how the disaster could impact the long-term health of the region's bountiful salmon and trout stocks.

"It's not just that copper concentrations are three times higher than the guidelines itself, but what are the pathways in which the copper can get into the food web ... At this point it's unanswerable."

About 24 million cubic metres of mine silt and wastewater gushed into nearby rivers and lakes when the tailings dam at the Imperial Metals-run gold and copper mine burst last August.

TERROR TRIAL

Few would have survived legislature attack, court hears

Every reveller on the B.C. legislature's front lawn on Canada Day 2013 would have been in danger of "death or grievous bodily harm" had a trio of shrapnel-packed pressure-cooker bombs successfully gone off, a police explosives expert told a court.

"I would not feel comfortable having someone on Belleville Street or on the sidewalk there by the waterfront knowing that those devices were going to explode," Const. Peter Cucheran told jurors on Tuesday.

Belleville Street runs immediately in front of the legislature and is about 150 metres from the alleged detonation sites.

The jury has already heard the bombs were inert and were built and hidden on the legislature grounds by John Nuttall and Amanda Korody while the RCMP conducted an undercover operation.

Both have pleaded not guilty to four terrorism charges related.

The minimum safe standby distance for a more-than-two-kilogram C4 explosive would be more than 250 metres, Cucheran told jurors.

Pressure waves emanating from the explosion would have been enough to cause death or serious injury within 30 metres, said Cucheran. "Blast pressure is what we would consider the most dangerous in close proximity to an explosion because it can move through you and simply turn your organs into mush," he added.

Footage played in B.C. Supreme Court on Tuesday showed Mounties detonating the same model of homemade pressure-cooker explosive that Nuttall and Korody are accused of building for their alleged plot.

B.C. man sought after Alberta homicide

Homicide investigators in Alberta have issued an arrest warrant for a 30-year-old man from Campbell River, B.C.

Mounties in Grande Prairie, Alta., say they are looking for Tommy Paul in connection with the death of Adrian Snider and have charged two other people accused in the crime.

Snider was last seen by his family on March 6, but police say he was not reported missing until March 30.

On Monday, police announced they had located remains believed to be those of Snider. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Canadian veterans honoured in Netherlands

It was 70 years ago Tuesday that the guns fell nearly silent along the Canadian and British lines in Holland.

The war in northwestern Europe was almost over and Pte. Frank Graham, who'd fought with the Canadian 1st Division all through Sicily, Italy and Holland, found himself thunderstruck.

"When I heard they'd given up, I thought, no they don't," said Graham, 92.

The BBC announced the ceasefire the night before, on May 4, 1945, yet Graham said he'd been disappointed by rumours before.

Seven decades on, Graham was part of a sentimental parade of veterans who rolled past a reviewing stand in vintage army vehicles outside of the hotel where the capitulation was made official. As was evident on their faces, it was a bittersweet moment for the old soldiers in this tranquil, leafy town as they mingled with actors dressed in the uniforms they used to wear and rode in trucks and jeeps they had once driven.

Heavy thunder threatened Tuesday's parade and even cancelled a photo opportunity Prime Minister Stephen Harper had planned with the veterans.

It was far cry from the breezy, cold day in 1945 when Col.-Gen. Johannes Blaskowitz, commander of all German forces in the Netherlands and Denmark, showed up at the wrecked Hotel de Wereld.

Canadian Lt.-Gen. Charles Foulkes accepted the surrender in a simple ceremony, which was to be followed two days later by the more formal unconditional surrender of all German forces accepted by Allied supreme commander U.S. Gen. Dwight Eisenhower at Reims, France.

Despite the general ceasefire on May 5, 1945 in the Canadian sector, troops continued to die for at least three more days, said Canadian War Museum historian Jeff Noakes.

COURT

Omar Khadr's bail remains in limbo

Any hopes Omar Khadr had of tasting freedom for the first time in almost 13 years were dashed Tuesday when an Alberta justice said she wanted more time to consider whether he should be released on bail.

Court of Appeal Justice Myra Bielby said she would decide Thursday whether to grant the federal government's request to keep him behind bars despite a lower court order that he be freed.

Khadr showed little emotion as he was led from court, but one of his lawyers, Dennis Edney, was disappointed with the decision.

"Of course, I'd like to grab him, throw him in the car, take him home," Edney said outside court. At issue is an April 24 order from Court of Queen's Bench Justice June Ross that Khadr, 28, should be given bail pending his appeal of his war crimes conviction in the United States.

He was due for release as early as Tuesday under Ross's order and Edney had arrived with a bag of clothes, fully prepared to take Khadr home.

IN BRIEF

Inuit land-claim group to get $250M in settlement

Ottawa is to pay an Inuit land-claim group more than $250 million to settle a long-standing lawsuit and improve training for Inuit to enter the territorial civil service.

The payment is included in a previously announced deal for more than $300 million that ends a claim against the federal government by Nunavut Tunngavik Inc., the group that oversees the Nunavut land claim.

The land claim guaranteed that Inuit would hold the same percentage of jobs in the territorial government that they do in the general population — about 85 per cent. But the level has been stuck at about 50 per cent for years.

NDP sweeps to majority and ends 43-year Tory dynasty

Former PC leader Jim Prentice has resigned. THE CANADIAN PRESS

The NDP has won its first majority government in Alberta by toppling the Progressive Conservative colossus that has dominated the province for more than four decades.

The party under leader Rachel Notley swept all 19 constituencies in Edmonton on Tuesday, made inroads in previously barren NDP territory in Calgary and Lethbridge, and added several seats in rural areas.

The Wildrose party was poised to take second place to form the official Opposition, while Premier Jim Prentice and his battered PCs trailed in third.

Prentice, Wildrose Leader Brian Jean and Liberal Leader David Swann were all elected.

The NDP win is a tectonic shift in Alberta politics, which has seen government change hands only four times since the Liberals won the first election when Alberta became a province in 1905.

The Tories, first elected in 1971, had been the longest-serving government in Canadian history at 43 years and almost eight months.

For Notley, the victory is a vindication of the pioneering efforts of her father, Grant Notley. He helped found Alberta's NDP and kept the movement alive as the sole NDP member of the legislature in the 1970s.

He died in a plane crash in northern Alberta in 1984, two years before his party made its first big breakthrough in 1986 and became official Opposition. Jim Prentice has resigned as leader of the Alberta Progressive Conservatives.

He is also giving up the seat he retained in the provincial election in Calgary Foothills.

He says he takes responsibility for the decision that led to the party's resounding defeat.

The Tories have finished third in the election that saw the NDP win a majority government. The Wildrose will form the official Opposition. The NDP had never come close to power in Alberta. Its previous high-water mark was 16 seats in 1986.

It's the second defeat for Prentice at the hands of the NDP. He lost to the party in Calgary Mountain View when he ran for the PCs in 1986.

MUDSLIDE

Police recover 60 bodies

Emergency workers have recovered the bodies of 60 people — including nine foreigners — who were killed when Nepal's earthquake triggered a mudslide that buried a village in the scenic Langtang Valley popular with tourists.

Residents of the village, also called Langtang, said Tuesday that as many as 200 people could have been killed by tons of earth and mud unleashed in the devastating April 25 quake.

"The entire village was wiped out by the mudslide. There were some 60 houses there, but they were all buried under rubble. It will be impossible to recover all the bodies," said Gautam Rimal, the top government official in the Rasuwa district.

The Langtang Valley, about 60 kilometres north of Nepal's capital, Kathmandu, is now about a two-day hike from the nearest town because the landslide has blocked nearby roads.

While helicopters allow easy access, they remain in short supply because of aid missions across parts of Nepal.

The April 25 earthquake killed more than 7,500 people and injured more than 14,000 as it flattened mountain villages and destroyed buildings and archaeological sites in Kathmandu.

Authorities say up to one-third of Kathmandu's residents have left since the quake. In the first days, bus stations were jammed with people fearing aftershocks or trying to get home to relatives in devastated villages. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Video shows migrants fleeing stricken dinghy

MEDITERRANEAN

Several feared drowned, as many travellers cannot swim

Young men piled over each other, some shimmying up ropes dangling from the towering rescue ship and others falling into the churning sea. Women and children were the last off the stricken dinghy during a chaotic Mediterranean rescue in which at least five migrants died and more were feared drowned.

Dramatic footage shot by a seaman aboard the Maltese freighter showed the weekend rescue of more than 100 West Africans aboard the flimsy boat off the coast of Libya. Survivors were brought Tuesday to the Sicilian port of Catania.

The video highlights the danger of marine rescue, where safety and tragedy too often lie just moments apart. With tens of thousands trying to cross the sea on small boats launched by human traffickers from Libya — and hundreds dying in the attempt — the question of how best to save migrants from drowning has taken centre stage in Europe.

Crew members interviewed by The Associated Press said everyone aboard the cargo ship Zeran had undergone rescue training. But while a previous rescue several weeks ago happened calmly without any loss of life, on Sunday elation at the prospect of being saved quickly turned to panic.

Dramatic footage emerged Tuesday showing a Mediterranean Sea rescue of migrants on a sinking rubber boat. The migrants desperately clamber up ropes and a ladder from the cargo ship Zeran that came to their aid in the sea between Libya and Sicily on Sunday. Five bodies were recovered and brought ashore Tuesday along with the survivors. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Unaware that they would be thrown a ladder, frantic migrants trampled over one another to reach the ropes that were meant to hold it in place, with some dangling precariously as they clambered along the lines to reach the tall freighter.

> Someone grabbed onto the rope. All the other people started pushing to try to save themselves, but the people started falling in the water.
> Astoy Fall Dia, 24, a migrant from Senegal

Some jumped or fell overboard to catch lifesavers tossed into the water by crew members. Others emptied jerry cans of gasoline to use as floats, as the dinghy — already deflated at the front — began taking in water.

"Easy! Easy!" implored a crew member from Zeran's deck.

"There was the big ship there, and they threw down ropes," Astoy Fall Dia, a 24 year-old migrant from Senegal, told The Associated Press after disembarking from the cargo ship.

"Someone grabbed onto the rope. All the other people started pushing to try to save themselves but the people started falling in the water."

Dia said she survived because she stayed close to the dinghy and because she knew how to swim — unlike most of the migrants who come from poor African countries.

Five bodies were recovered from inside the dinghy, floating amid garbage and water that had seeped in, though it wasn't clear if they died in the final rush to be rescued, as one crew member maintained, or during the crossing.

At least another five to nine people fell into the water and drowned, said the seaman who shot the video, though one man floating away with the current and clinging to a lifesaver was rescued by crew on a Zeran lifeboat.

The seaman and other crew members spoke on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to speak to the media.

Searches on mobile devices surpass PCs

TECHNOLOGY

Smartphones the new status quo in how we get information

Google's search engine has hit a tipping point in technology's shift to smartphones. More search requests are being made on mobile devices than on personal computers in the U.S. and many other parts of the world.

The shift, which began with Apple's release of the iPhone in 2007, rocked PC makers and other tech companies such as Microsoft with businesses tied to sales of desktop and laptop computers. Google has adapted better than most companies, partly because its services are embedded in the popular Android mobile operating system, but it hasn't been totally unscathed.

Google's average ad prices have been declining for the past three-and-a-half years, partly because marketers so far have been unwilling to pay as much for the commercial message displayed on the smaller screens of smartphones. The company, though, says mobile ad prices have been steadily climbing and will continue to do so as marketers recognize the value of being able to connect with prospective customers at the precise moment that they are looking for a place to eat, or comparing products on a smartphone while standing in a store.

"The future of mobile is now," says Jerry Dischler, a Google Inc. vice-president in charge of the company's AdWords service for creating online marketing campaigns. THE CANADIAN PRESS

CRTC rules to limit roaming charges

Canada's telecom regulator is rejigging the regime for wholesale wireless roaming rates in the hopes that the changes will eventually lead to lower charges for consumers.

The Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission (CRTC) released a decision Tuesday that limits the roaming rates the three biggest wireless carriers charge smaller carriers to piggyback on their networks for five years.

In its decision, the CRTC also asked the Conservative government to repeal legislation that currently limits what small carriers can charge the big players to use their wireless networks.

The decision unravels provisions imposed by the federal government last year, but the intention of the new framework is the same: to give smaller players the ability to expand.

"The measures that we are putting in place today in the wireless market will ensure that Canadians continue to have more choice as well as innovative, high-quality services," said CRTC chairman Jean-Pierre Blais.

Industry Minister James Moore praised the ruling.

"Today's decision will create greater competition in the wireless sector," he said in a statement.

"We know that more competition means more choice, lower prices and better services for Canadian consumers." THE CANADIAN PRESS

REBUTTAL

Decision carries negative implications, says expert

While the government's control over roaming rates could lower wireless costs, Martin Masse, senior editor at the Montreal Economic Institute, feels it will negatively affect the growth of Canada's telecommunications industry.

"Essentially it's not sustainable competition," he said. "We get less investment because it's cheaper to depend on mandated access." THE CANADIAN PRESS

the big number

88,400

This is the number, by 2014, of surviving Second World War veterans in Canada. Their average age: 90. Consider the number of Afghanistan vets — about 40,000 — to understand the scale of the country's sacrifice in the conflict that ended with victory in Europe 70 years ago. Just before 12 a.m. on May 8, 1945, world leaders signed Germany's Instrument of Surrender in Berlin, concluding the six-year war that involved 1,159,000 Canadian military personnel, wounded 55,000 and killed 44,090.

Producing power at home should be worth our while

THE SCIENCE
Stephanie Orford

On Thursday, Tesla Motors CEO Elon Musk announced the company's latest foray into renewable-energy technology: the Tesla Powerwall, a wall-mounted battery for homes or businesses to store energy for later use.

This could be the beginning of a new energy future for Canada and the world. And at about $3,000-$3,500 US for a Powerwall, plus wiring and installation, they're attainable for many homeowners. The batteries can be recycled using Tesla's program for its existing electric vehicle batteries. Canadian firm NRStor plans to start selling Powerwalls in Canada in 2016.

Canadian policy-makers and energy utilities need to harness the green-power generation and storage potential of Canadian households by giving middle-class Canadians incentives, such as tax credits and feed-in tariffs, to produce and store green energy. The cost of solar panels has dropped a hundredfold since 1977, with wind and other renewables following suit, making household energy harvesting increasingly appealing to Canadians who want to live green while reducing their costs.

"The decentralization of energy is where the future is going," says Jesika Briones, business development manager at the Advanced Energy Centre.

Currently there are lots of limitations on Canadians who want to generate their own electricity. Canada has put tariffs on Chinese solar panels, making them more expensive and harder to import. B.C., Quebec and other provinces allow net metering (when property owners provide the grid with home-generated renewable energy, in exchange for a reduced bill). Only Ontario actually pays people who feed the grid.

That incentive encourages people to generate as much green energy as they can, because they'll get paid for it. A country of green energy-generating households could power industry and public facilities without as much need for fossil fuels. In 2012, fossil fuels still made up 74 per cent of Canada's energy consumption, the World Bank says.

A home battery system is "the missing piece," as Tesla calls it, to our green future. It will let households buy from the grid at off-peak hours when it's least expensive and sell to the grid at peak hours when it's most needed. Versions of this arrangement are already in place in Germany and some American states.

According to a 2013 National Academy of Sciences study of electric vehicle batteries, when you use renewable electricity to charge them, the results are still better for the environment than fossil fuels.

"Combined with solar PV (photovoltaics, a solar-energy technology), Tesla has made energy independence not only more accessible but also more desirable," Briones said.

A home battery, Tesla says, is the missing piece to our green future.

The new energy market would create jobs and opportunities for Canadian companies to innovate. A few, like electronics maker Eguana Technologies and green-battery company Electrovaya, are already on the forefront. But we need more incentives before household green-power generation and storage can go viral.

A Kardashian selfie book: give the people what they want

There's a lot of blustering in the media about Kim Kardashian's already bestselling book and plenty of feigned surprise at its popularity.

But that just shows how often the media speaks from the pulpit and not the crowd.

Kardashian's new book of selfies, Selfish, has caused so much wheezing on narcissism that holier-than-thou writers must be hoarse by now.

They're wasting their breath. Kardashian is only an expert manipulator of the fame our society gleefully hands her.

Hundreds of fans camped outside a New York bookstore Tuesday — including two 21-year-old women who drove all the way from Washington — to get an autograph scrawled across this photographic memoir of parties, workouts and nudes.

Meanwhile, the media has lined up to gawk at Selfish's hubris, a reaction notably absent to Chloë Sevigny's recent photography book, called Chloë Sevigny, featuring photos of her and released by the same publisher.

In his review, the Guardian's critic revelled in describing Kardashian's "carnal fullness" and "curvaceous flesh."

Jonathan Jones deemed it "guilt-free looking" and he equated Selfish to the end of photography as art.

"Selfish is the final grave marker of that aesthetic delusion," Jones wrote.

At least he defended celebrity selfies. They give "an illusion of intimacy that is priceless in an age that cherishes authenticity."

Others, distressed by her fame, have gone straight for Kardashian's jugular. As the Toronto Star's Vinay Menon wrote: "This is a woman with Type V blood, as in vanity."

Menon mocked her lack of talent and her use of the word "skank" in her earlier attempt at writing, in the novel Dollhouse.

"I have no answers today, people," he wrote in the voice of a doomsday preacher. "Just an unsettling, irrational feeling that soon, very soon, the skanks will be coming for all of us."

Well now, that doesn't sound so bad. But come on, branding her a "skank" is not a very sophisticated take on the sex appeal that drives her fame. It's a sexist slur that paints all cleavage selfies with the same skank brush.

It also accuses Kardashian of somehow hoodwinking 31.5 million Instagram followers into loving her. She's only feeding our own hunger for titillation. She's unapologetic about flaunting her body, and I can respect that.

"Look at my boobies! Look at my butt!" John McMurtrie wrote in a mock-Kardashian voice in the San Francisco Chronicle.

Plenty of us want to. To use another sexist term, we're the media whores.

CHRISTOPHER LLOYD

Actor talks perks of indies ahead of new film, Back to the Future anniversary

Steve Gow
Metro | Life

Christopher Lloyd and director April Mullen on the set of the Canadian-made crime thriller 88. CONTRIBUTED

It's a big year for character actor Christopher Lloyd. After all, a film he made decades ago is having a rebirth of sorts. With the 30th anniversary of Back to the Future approaching this fall, there are a number of celebrations, documentaries and tributes planned.

"I don't keep up that well with it. I don't keep up that well with anything," laughed the 76-year-old star recently. "(But) films don't usually have that, so I'm embracing it."

And so he should be. After all, the 1985 time-travel comedy that spawned two hit sequels was not only a success in its day, but it also has only seemed to gather more fans as the years advanced. In fact, Family Guy creator Seth McFarlane was such an admirer he asked Lloyd to make a cameo appearance as his "Doc" Brown character in last year's hit comedy A Million Ways to Die in the West.

"So many people have come up to me and said they grew up with Back to the Future; that it shaped their lives to the extent that they chose to be an engineer or a physicist or something along those lines because of the effect of the films," admitted Lloyd. "It feels good to be part of something that's meant so much to so many people.

Indeed, with Doc Brown, the comedy's excitable, white-haired inventor, Lloyd has crafted one of cinema's most iconic figures. So unquestionably, he must be looking forward to "participating in some of these events" to celebrate it. First, however, he is just as eager to discuss his unlikely casting in the Canadian-made crime thriller 88.

"Here was a guy that nobody has given me an opportunity to be so I just jumped on it," explained Lloyd of the film in which he plays a crime boss at the centre of one woman's quest to score revenge for her lover's death.

"Whether it's a dramatic role, farce or comedy or melodrama, I have the same task — to make the character real so when the audience sees me, they understand and relate," said Lloyd of 88's seedy strip-club character. "That's kind of what I do regardless of the type of character it is."

While that range has assured Lloyd of an endearing on-screen longevity in Hollywood ever since his debut in 1975's classic One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest, the veteran actor now insists he looks forward as much to the freedom that comes with making indie projects like 88 as he does blockbuster hits like Back to the Future.

"It's nice getting away from Hollywood," admitted Lloyd. "You do a film in Hollywood and men in suits are hovering; they're there second-guessing you and it's good to get away, be independent and feel relaxed."

88 screens across Canada on Wednesday as part of Canadian Indie Film Series.

HIS FAVE ROLES

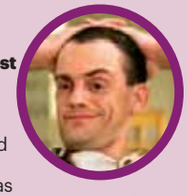
Over four decades, Christopher Lloyd has starred in more than 100 films and series. We reflect on just three of his most famous roles:

The Addams Family (Uncle Fester):

"At first I didn't see how it could be because I'm kind of tall, I'm kind of slim and Fester's a sight gag," recalled Lloyd. "If I'm channel-surfing and one of The Addams Family films comes up, I don't move any further — I just sit there and enjoy it."

Back to the Future ("Doc" Brown):

"I loved his excitement about discovery. Doc Brown has got a head that is constantly coming out with new ways to do things," said Lloyd. "He fell down in his bathroom one day and hit his head on the toilet seat and, bang — he (invents) the flux capacitor. That's so cool!"



One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest (Taber):

"It was my first film," said Lloyd. "Jack Nicholson was a big idol of mine before Cuckoo's Nest from his previous work (and) I couldn't believe it. It was just a momentous moment in my life."

Add a veggie crust to mac and cheese

WORD OF MOUTH
Theresa Albert
myfriendinfood.com

Macaroni and cheese gets a healthy overhaul made with a base of cauliflower, spinach or tomatoes. ISTOCK

Last year it was grilled cheese; this year it's mac and cheese getting the red carpet overhaul.

A Mac & Cheese Festival coming up next month in Toronto promises to bring together "savvy cooks and food entrepreneurs" in order to reinvent this comfort food.

Most cooks seem to take a "go big or go home" approach to the dish — adding white chocolate, for instance, or combining it with a pot of chili.

I'm not a huge fan of messing with a classic by mixing in miscellany, but there is so much fun you can have adding a crust.

Keep the full-fat, sharp cheese taste in the traditional homemade recipes (or cheat with boxed product) but add a veggie bottom. Here are a few bottoms to try:

Cauli Crust

- Grate 2 cups steamed cauliflower into a bowl, stir in a beaten egg and 1/2 cup of Parmesan cheese and press into casserole dish.
- Bake until it forms a crispy crust and then top with cooked mac and cheese to warm together.

Go Greek

- Mix together 3 cups of thawed frozen spinach, 1 tbsp oregano, 2 cloves of garlic, 1 cup crumbled feta. Press into casserole dish and top with mac and cheese and bake until heated through.

Kiss it Italian

- Slice 3 or 4 ripe tomatoes into thick slices and lay into casserole dish.
- Place a handful of basil into the pan, drizzle with balsamic vinegar and top with cooked mac and cheese. Bake to heat through. Invert onto a platter.

Nothing says love like a creamy casserole, but it doesn't have to be all fatty carbs all the time!

WINE COCKTAIL

A treat for Mom on her day

LIQUID ASSETS
Peter Rockwell
@therealwineguy

While the majority of winemakers I know would prefer to see their creations enjoyed without any alien additions, inspired wine cocktails are a respectable part of the restaurant scene, especially in Italy, where palate-enhancing drinks are quaffed prior to dinner or over brunch.

Those looking for a beverage to pamper mom this Mother's Day should try The Spritz, a bright orange bevy from the northeastern region of Veneto.

In a large wine glass, add a shot of Aperol liqueur ($19.49 to $27.29) to a helping of bubbly prosecco; top it off with a little sparkling water and add an orange wedge as a garnish.

Refreshing, citrusy and lightly bitter, it's a liquid union that looks as good as it tastes.

Trains, crowns and sheer nerve

Trains, ruby reds and barely there gowns ruled the red carpet. Jennifer Lopez in Versace.

MET GALA FASHION

China-themed ball brings out the best and the barely dressed

Never let it be said that Rihanna doesn't know how to make an entrance.

On a night when big stars were a dime a dozen — try George and Amal Clooney, Lady Gaga, Madonna and Cher — the pop singer still managed to steal the show and conquer the red carpet at the Met Gala when she swooped in wearing a fur-trimmed yellow cape with floral swirls of gold and a train so long it required three wranglers.

The ensemble came with a little pink mini-dress underneath, and a sparkling tiara. In keeping with the evening's theme — China, and its artistic influence on the West — the outfit was designed by Beijing-based designer Guo Pei, whose sumptuous designs are on display in the current Met exhibit, China: Through the Looking Glass.

As befitting a star — or fashion royalty — Rihanna commanded premium attention on the carpet by being one of the very last to arrive. But compared to Beyoncé, she was an early bird.

Beyoncé and her husband, Jay Z, arrived so late that many photographers were giving up and leaving. She was highly photogenic, though, in a sheer, bejeweled Givenchy Haute Couture gown by Riccardo Tisci.

Deep, ruby reds, shimmery golds and other jewel tones dominated the colour scheme as the multitudes of invited celebrities embraced this year's China inspiration. There were sequins aplenty, and embroidery was everywhere.

One of the first to arrive was the gala's longtime head, Vogue editor Anna Wintour, who shimmered in an orange-and-red floral couture gown from Chanel.

She was followed by a succession of stars of film, music, fashion, TV and sports unrivalled anywhere but perhaps the Oscars.

One of the world's most watched women, Amal Clooney, arrived on her husband's arm in a tiered ruby-red gown by John Galliano.

Jennifer Lopez bared a lot more skin — actually, more than most, in a red Versace gown with sheer side panels.

Kim Kardashian opted for sheer, too, in a white gown with a feathery train by Peter Dundas for Roberto Cavalli, the designer's first for the house. Little sister Kendall Jenner opted for Calvin Klein, sparkling in green with sexy laces on each side. And Justin Bieber showed up in a black jacket slithering with gold dragons, by Balmain.

Canyon is smaller but mighty

ROAD TESTED

JIL MCINTOSH/FOR METRO

REVIEW

Pickup truck nicely fills gap between small and midsize

Jil McIntosh
For Metro

Today's trucks are better than they've ever been, but they're also bigger than ever. And since not everyone wants or needs a full-size truck, the all-new GMC Canyon might be the answer.

The Canyon, along with its mechanical twin Chevrolet Colorado, shares only its name with the small truck last offered in 2012. This version is more midsize than compact, but it's still easier to park, and to get in and out, versus most full-size trucks.

It's available as an Extended Cab with two rear-hinged back doors, and as a Crew Cab with four conventionally opening doors. The Extended Cab comes strictly with a long box (6-foot-1), while the Crew Cab comes with long box or short box (5-foot-2).

The base engine is a 2.5-litre four-cylinder, available with a six-speed manual or automatic transmission, but I tested the 3.6-litre V6, which comes exclusively with the automatic. All models also offer two- or four-wheel drive. Depending on the configuration, towing capacity goes as high as 3,175 kilograms.

No truck really drives "truck-like" anymore, but the Canyon is very well done. Its steering is well-weighted — light enough for easy manoeuvring, but weighted enough for confidence — and when the going gets mucky, it can be dialled into four-wheel on the fly. The V6 engine is smooth, and with just enough of a growl to satisfy fans who want a truck, not a car.

> The V6 engine is smooth, and with just enough of a growl

The interior is a scaled-down version of the full-size GMC Sierra, and you can order such upscale options as navigation, forward collision alert, lane departure warning, and leather seats. A nice touch is that while many manufacturers include all of the available option buttons, and blank out the ones that weren't ordered, GM installs just the right number of controls. It's a small thing, but the dash doesn't look like you "cheaped out" with all those blank buttons.

Also borrowed from GM's bigger trucks is the simple but effective bumper step that gives you a quick leg up into the box. A factory spray-in bedliner is available, too.

There are still a few contenders in this segment, but for performance and comfort, I think the Canyon is currently the best of the bunch.

MARKET POSITION

- Midsize trucks don't do as well in the market as full-size, possibly because their upper-line prices can overlap those of their larger siblings. Buyers have to look at smaller-size convenience as well as price.

AUTO NEWS VW OFFERS HOT HATCH FANS 400 REASONS TO GET EXCITED

The most powerful Golf in history is to be the Golf R400. VOLKSWAGEN

Volkswagen has confirmed its Golf R400 concept is going into production, making it the most powerful hot hatchback on the market. The car, based on the 'standard' R version of the current Golf, has been conceived as an engineering exercise to see how much extra power could be squeezed from the company's two-litre, four-cylinder turbocharged powerplant. The answer turned out to be 395 bhp (or 400 PS, hence the concept's name), which in turn meant a theoretical 0-100 k/ph time of 3.9 seconds and an unrestricted top speed of 280 k/ph. All of which is remarkable considering that in the Golf R the engine tops out at 296 bhp. The R400 boasts a higher output than anything that Audi, BMW or Mercedes has to offer in the sporty, compact sector. AFP

FORD MOTOR COMPANY

Car-people link drives cultural anthropologist

AUTO PILOT
Mike Goetz

Some people have such deep connections with their vehicles they made sure they got buried in them.

There was that California socialite and her 1963 Ferrari 330 America, that former Second World War army sergeant and his 1994 Chevrolet Corvette, and that 90-year-old gentleman from South Carolina and his 1973 Pontiac Catalina.

Michael Thomas studies this car-people connection for a living. He is Ford Motor Company's first on-staff cultural anthropologist. Speaking over the phone from Ford's worldwide HQ in Dearborn, Mich., he noted that some objects do more than their primarily design role; they cross over into the cultural realm and become important in how we associate as humans.

This cultural role of vehicles is what deepens our connection to them, says Thomas. "Cars help individuals exert themselves in the social world."

Examples of how vehicles implicate themselves into an individual's social world are many and varied, and differ throughout the world. Here in North America, the classic ones are cars as extensions of an individual's personality (be it speedy or quirky or whatever), as status symbols, and as one of the last bastions of personal space.

But Ford is also interested in finding the more nuanced ways vehicles implicate themselves into our lives, and particularly in areas of the world where car ownership is a relatively new phenomenon.

Thomas has been working at Ford for two years now. He and his team spent the first year just gathering data around the globe. How does one gather cultural anthropological data? By shadowing people, from the time they get up to the time they're done for the night, for several days in a row, much like a reality show, just without the cameras, fake drama, and C-list celebrities.

"The idea is to triangulate all the data, not just the car-related data."

One of the subjects the team followed was a new dad in China, whose passion is extreme sports. His vehicle is very important to him, because it had to fit his new role as guardian and protector, and yet still embody a sliver of his former edgy self. So he chose a safe but sporty-enough vehicle, that he envisioned himself using, to navigate his family in and around the scary traffic conditions in urban China — a new form of extreme sport, if you will.

"We found that people use vehicles to help them through their transitions," adds Thomas.

Another subject was a sari salesperson in India. As per cultural protocol, as soon as the transaction shifted to the payment phase, she had to hand off the transaction to a male colleague. The rest of her life was like that, too, always deferring to male authority. But in her car, she took up the same amount of space as anyone else on the road. It was her way of to gain agency not permitted in other areas of her life.

"She didn't have to defer to anyone on the road. She was equal."

Lions schedule exhibition game vs. Eskimos at UBC

The B.C. Lions announced Tuesday that they will host the Edmonton Eskimos in a pre-season game at UBC's Thunderbird Stadium on June 19.

BC Place Stadium, where the Lions typically play their home games, is unavailable for the CFL team due to the FIFA Women's World Cup, which runs June 6 to July 5.

The Leos will be back in BC Place for their home opener on July 10 against the Saskatchewan Roughriders.

"The size and layout of Thunderbird Stadium allows us to offer some very exclusive game-day opportunities that we cannot undertake at BC Place, so we believe it's going to be a memorable experience for everyone," said president and CEO Dennis Skulsky in a statement.

Robinson turns to Tornaghi

WHITECAPS

Sparingly used backup keeper to start first leg of Amway semi

Cam Tucker
Metro | Vancouver

The Vancouver Whitecaps do have a backup goalkeeper. His name is Paolo Tornaghi.

He doesn't play much. In fact, he's never started a game for the local Major League Soccer side during a regular-season, playoff or Amway Canadian Championship contest since signing here as a free agent in February of 2014.

That's about to change on Wednesday.

Carl Robinson
GETTY IMAGES

Head coach Carl Robinson, when pressed about personnel decisions for what will be a mostly different lineup for the first leg of the Amway Canadian Championship semifinal against FC Edmonton, confirmed Tornaghi will get the start for the Whitecaps in that match.

A year ago, when the Whitecaps travelled to Toronto to play in the ACC semifinal, Robinson went with rookie Marco Carducci, who was still only 17 years old.

Goalkeeper Paolo Tornaghi makes a save while a member of the Chicago Fire in March 2012. GETTY IMAGES

When it comes to MLS competition, Tornaghi plays behind David Ousted, the towering Dane who started every game last regular season and is on that same pace again this year.

No goalie controversy here, and it has been like that for a long time, now.

But now, after watching so many games from the bench, Tornaghi will be given the chance to finally get in some playing time, while looking to help his club get back to Vancouver for the second leg of the semifinal with the chance to advance.

"He's a great teammate. He's a great guy in the locker-room. The boys love him. I love him to bits," said Robinson of Tornaghi, the 26-year-old Italian.

"And he'll get his chance on Wednesday."

RESUMÉ

Before joining the Whitecaps, Tornaghi played two seasons for the Chicago Fire, appearing in nine MLS matches.

Pacquiao hit with class-action lawsuit

BOXING

Plaintiffs claim fraud over hidden injury, poor showing

Manny Pacquiao and his handlers have been hit with a lawsuit asking for damages for anyone who paid to watch his fight with Floyd Mayweather Jr. because he failed to disclose his shoulder was injured.

The suit was filed Tuesday in federal court in Las Vegas on behalf of two plaintiffs, identified as Staphane Vanel and Kami Rahbaran.

It alleges that the two were defrauded after paying to watch the fight, and seeks class-action status on behalf of anyone who bought tickets, pay-per-view or bet on the fight.

The suit comes as Nevada boxing regulators are looking into possible disciplinary action against Pacquiao for failing to disclose the injury suffered in training for the fight. Pacquiao, who would go on to lose a unanimous decision, is expected to undergo surgery this week for a rotator cuff tear.

In particular, members of the Nevada Athletic Commission want to know why Pacquiao checked "no" when filling out a state form the day before the fight that asked whether he had a shoulder injury.

"Our job is to protect the health and safety of fighters and the integrity of the sport," commission chairman Francisco Aguilar said. "We expect our fighters to be forthright."

Pacquiao's promoter, Bob Arum, said earlier the injury suffered four weeks before the fight appeared to have sufficiently healed, but Pacquiao's handlers still unsuccessfully sought to get a pain-killing shot in the shoulder in the dressing room before the fight.

Pacquiao said he reinjured the shoulder in the fourth round when he landed his best punches of the night against Mayweather.

Meanwhile, Mayweather said in a text to ESPN personality Stephen A. Smith that he would welcome a rematch with Pacquiao.

"I will fight him in a year after his surgery," the text read.

Solder feeling 'fine' despite cancer diagnosis

New England Patriots offensive tackle Nate Solder says he feels fine at the team's voluntary off-season activities.

He missed them last year after being diagnosed with testicular cancer and undergoing surgery. But he played in every game and helped protect Tom Brady's left side on the way to a Super Bowl championship.

Solder went public about two weeks ago with the news of his cancer. Now he is spreading the word about the need for early detection.

Carroll helps Hawks even series as Wizards miss Wall

DeMarre Carroll scored 22 points, Kyle Korver bounced back from a miserable first half and the top-seeded Atlanta Hawks held off the Washington Wizards 106-90 on Tuesday, taking advantage of John Wall's absence to even the Eastern Conference semifinals at 1-1. Wall, who finished out the series opener with an injured left hand, was scratched just before Game 2. Ramon Sessions did a good job filling in with 21 points, but Washington lost for the first time in these playoffs. Korver went 1-for-7 from the 3-point line in the first half but improved after the break, including one from the corner with just under 3 minutes remaining that gave the Hawks a 98-88 lead.Game 3 is Saturday at Washington.

Kane and Crawford help Blackhawks curb Wild

NHL

Chicago ahead 3-0 in Western Conference semifinal

Patrick Kane scored in the first period for Chicago, and Corey Crawford and the Blackhawks made the superstar's goal stand up for a 1-0 win over the Minnesota Wild on Tuesday.

Chicago took a commanding 3-0 lead in the Western Conference semifinal series. Game 4 is in Minnesota again on Thursday.

Kane has six goals and five assists in nine playoff games, bouncing back just fine from the broken collarbone that kept him out of the last quarter of the regular season.

Crawford made 30 saves, giving him 90 on 94 shots in the three games. Stifled time after time on chance after chance, the Wild have scored just once over their last 150-plus minutes on the ice.

GAME 3 In St. Paul

HAWKS	WILD

The Blackhawks last led a playoff series 3-0 in the Western Conference finals against San Jose in 2010, when they went on to win the Stanley Cup.

An overnight power outage softened the ice, sending the arena scrambling to restore the surface in time for the morning skates.

The skating conditions were back to normal by nightfall, and there was sure no slowing down the Blackhawks.

On a first-period power play, Patrick Sharp centred the puck to Andrew Shaw, who poked it just enough to his left where Kane skated unabated up the wing.

The 26-year-old speedster snapped a low shot that slipped past Devan Dubnyk's pads to quiet the buzz in the crowd. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Price, Ovechkin, Benn named finalists for most oustanding player award

Canadiens netminder Carey Price
GRAHAM HUGHES/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Montreal Canadiens goalie Carey Price, Washington Capitals forward Alex Ovechkin and Dallas Stars forward Jamie Benn were announced as the finalists for the Ted Lindsay Award on Tuesday.

The Ted Lindsay Award is presented annually to the "most outstanding player" in the NHL, as voted by fellow members of the National Hockey League Players' Association.

Benn and Price are each seeking their first Ted Lindsay Award, while Ovechkin could be honoured by his fellow players for the fourth time in his career.

The winner will be announced on June 24 during the 2015 NHL Awards in Las Vegas.

Sidney Crosby of the Pittsburgh Penguins won the Ted Lindsay Award the previous two seasons.

The Award honours Ted Lindsay, an all-star forward who played for the Detroit Red Wings and Chicago Blackhawks and was known for his skill, tenacity, leadership, and for his role in establishing the original Players' Association.

Prep time: 10 minutes
Cook time: 36 minutes
Serving Size: 4

Ingredients
- 3 tsp vegetable oil, divided
- 4 medium chicken quarters cut into thighs and drumsticks
- ¼ cup all-purpose flour
- 2 tsp minced fresh garlic
- 1½ cups chopped onion
- 1½ cups chopped green bell peppers
- 1 cup white rice
- 1 can (19 oz) crushed tomatoes
- 1¾ cups chicken stock
- ½ cup sliced stuffed green olives
- 1 Tbsp drained capers
- 2 tsp dried basil
- 2 tsp chili powder
- 1½ tsp dried oregano
- 1 bay leaf
- ¼ cup chopped fresh parsley or cilantro

Directions

1. Preheat the oven to 400°F. Spray a 13- by 9-inch baking dish with cooking oil.

2. Spray a large non-stick skillet with cooking oil, add 2 tsp of the vegetable oil and place over medium heat. Dust the chicken with the flour. Brown on all sides, about 6 minutes. Add to baking dish.

6. Bring to a boil, cook for 1 minute and pour over the chicken. Cover tightly with foil and bake for 30 minutes, stirring a couple of times, until the juices run clear when the leg is pierced at the thickest point and the rice is tender. Garnish with parsley or cilantro.

Travel and social plans will go well today. News from afar is likely too, perhaps from someone you last saw on less than friendly terms.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
Be brutally honest today, both with yourself and with other people. The fact is you don't really care what others think. What you discover over the next 24 hours will affect you profoundly.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
What others are suggesting may sound enticing but before you go along with their plans try to work out what's in it for you and what's in it for them.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
You have your doubts about a plan or project that everyone else seems enthusiastic about and if you are smart you will speak up and start a debate.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Do what you feel like doing today and ignore those who say you are doing it wrong or that you should be doing more for other people. The fact is you have done your share and have every right to reward yourself.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Not even a Scorpio can get their own way all the time and you have no option now but to accept that others are calling the shots. Don't waste time complaining.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Go somewhere new and do something different today. The more adventurous you are and the further you travel from your home base the more fun you will have.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
This is generally a positive time for you but you still need to take care where your finances are concerned. Above all you should resist the temptation to spend money on luxuries and other things you know you cannot really afford.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
You may be thinking of starting something new but would it not make more sense to finish what you started a while back first? Today's powerful Sun-Pluto link will help you knuckle down and get the job done – finally!

Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
You may think that if you don't act fast someone else will beat you to a prize that should have been yours — and maybe you're right, maybe they will — but is it really so important? You don't have to be this competitive.
